in which students specifically connect the knowledge and skills acquired during the MSc degree to their experience in the workplace

The Professional Capstone Thesis integrates three important aspects of the HRDS master experience. First, it should highlight what students have learned in the many encounters they have had with the : these include the internship but also the Data Industry Round and the exchanges with professionals invited to courses or public lectures. Second, as a , it should demonstrate the knowledge and skills students have gained in their courses through the discussion of opportunities, challenges and issues related to human rights and data science in a real world setting. Third, as a , it should demonstrate stud covered during the HRDS master: Students should contextualize their internship experience not only in relation to the practical skills learned, but also in relation to theories regarding the role that data play in society. How did the course material covered relate to the internship work? How might one theorize or conceptualize the kind of work the student was asked to carry out? Students should consider how the MSc courses might help them analyze their position in the workplace. They should
